

Ladino Clover

Technical Sheet

Ladino clover chief value is for pasture as it is a very high protein crop.

Creeping stems branch freely, develop numerous roots and readily form large patches.

Plants will survive in all types of soils but prefers moist, well drained loams. It will not succeed if it is too wet.

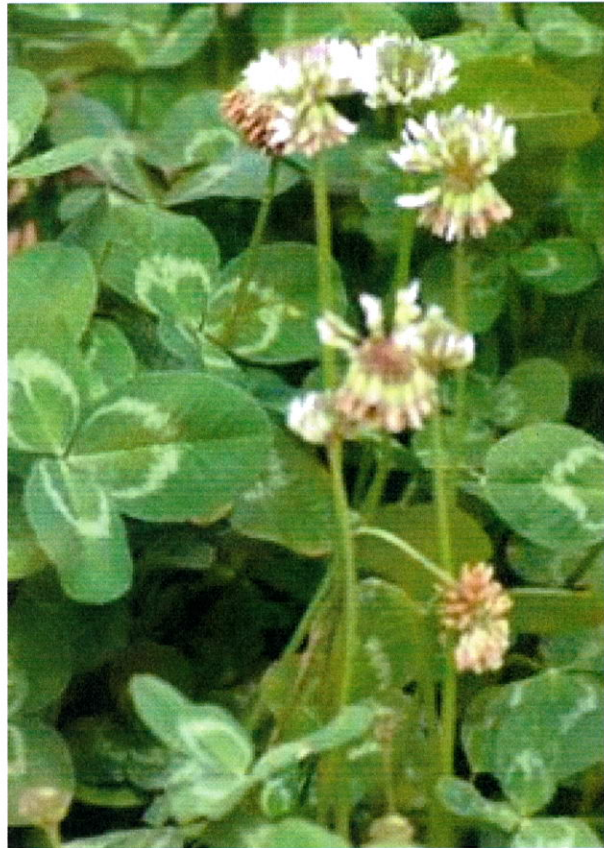

It stands tramping well and close grazing, instead of being harmful, stimulates it to a stronger growth. This makes it an excellent plant for hog pasture.

Plant is fertilized by insects as it needs pollen from another plant or the seeds will not develop.

Ladino clover will attract deer.
